AMERICAN TOILERS.

strong Picture in a Few Sentence of Their Homes.

In a few short sentences a writer in The Detroit Free Press strongly pictures the home of the tollers of America: is the wage workers paradise. When on his return from his daily task almost worn out he finds his wife cheerful, a substan-tial, well-cooked supper on the table, plain though it be, his children clean and orderly and his heart is cheered and his arms grow strong. In such a presence he soon forgets his weariness, and after a night's refreshing sleep in a clean hed he feels as thoroughly equipped for another hard day's toil as David when with five am stones in his shepherd's hag he went out to meet Goliath. God bless the homes of the tollers of America! They are the foundation of our free institutions, the foundation of our free institutions, the laboring man's paradise, the hope of the country. And God bless the wives and mothers who turn their, thoughts from fashions and gayeties of society and gives their beart's best energies to husbanding the earnings of their companions in toil and to the making of happier homes for them and their children."
